The heart of a healthy 70-year-old has 30 percent fewer cells than a 20-year-old's heart. When heart cells die, the other cells must stretch and grow to stay connected. An older person's heart cells may be up to 40 percent larger than a younger person's. Keep Your Heart Healthy and Reverse Heart Disease

Understanding Heart Aging and Reversing Heart Disease

Most times, the tumor grows in the left upper chamber of the heart (left atrium) at the atrial septum, which divides the two upper chambers of the heart. Myxomas can grow in other areas of the heart or in the heart valves, but such growth is rare. About 10 percent of myxomas are hereditary or develop as a result of other diseases (see above).
